There are several areas where the manuscript can be strengthened. First, the qualitative component would benefit from deeper integration with the quantitative results; currently, the thematic findings are summarized rather than fully explored, limiting the richness of interpretation. Expanding these sections with illustrative quotes or case examples could enhance the contextual depth. Second, the sampling method, which relies on convenience sampling, limits the generalizability of findings; a discussion of how this may influence results and suggestions for improving sampling in future research should be elaborated. Third, the discussion could more clearly link findings to theoretical frameworks and prior literature, highlighting how this study confirms, contradicts, or extends existing research. In addition, while the statistical analyses are generally sound, clarifying the apparent contradiction between the chi-square and regression results on AI dependency would help avoid reader confusion. The paper's language is clear and professional, though some sentences are overly long and could be streamlined for better readability. Finally, the implications for policy and practice could be made more actionable by including concrete recommendations for educators, administrators, and policymakers on AI literacy training, ethical guidelines, and role-specific interventions. Addressing these areas would significantly enhance the paper's clarity, impact, and contribution to the literature
